The vacuums being created by the killing of Bin Laden as the number one terrorist and the most wanted man on earth has not solved anything at all as El Qaeda maybe temporarily disorientated by the fact that their icon symbol has gone to meet with the 72 virgins in heaven and probably martyred for the short term by his followers, will not change the fact the terrorist group was a cog in the network of the Global Jihad.

The decision to take down the arch terrorist by the US President Barack Obama, was the correct decision politically but strategically has not solved anything as the terror organizations till Bin Laden's death, in a certain aspect idolized him as the terrorist leader that had pulled off the most daring of attacks against western societies, killed the most people in the history of the Islamic Jihad against the West.

With all of this there are other factors that must be taken into consideration and that is that the whole Middle East is in turmoil, oppressed populations are revolting against their corrupt dictatorial governments, many of these mini-revolutions were instigated by radical groups that have been reasonably dormant for many years such as the Muslim brotherhood and other similar groups dotted around the various countries involved.

Even Colonel Ghadaffi of Libya has reportedly gone into hiding at an unknown location somewhere in the Libyan Desert; President Assad of Syria is butchering his own countrymen for daring to challenge the Baathist Regime.

There are radical groups supporting the uprisings in all these countries. Egypt after Mubarak who kept the peace agreement alive with Israel has been ousted arrested along with his family for corruption and the theft of public funds.

A lot of the Arab world is now in turmoil with no direction in leadership that may point towards some semblance of order, control of the extremists, economic reforms and social improvements in their societies.

One thing is for sure that there will be more terrorist attacks in the pipeline as all the terrorists now will be in direct competition to fill the vacuums created by recent political events and the death of Bin Laden.

The trouble is that the west is not ready to confront the challenge...
